Real poll watchdogs: Bruno, Genevieve

By Philip C. Salinas

"BRUNO" and "Genevieve" are helping keep the quick-count center of the National Office of Election Management (NOEM) safe.

They are not Standard watch dogs. They are breed watchdogs.

"I have close dogs on 24-hour duty," Standard secretary general Guillermo Icaza said.

Bruno, a black Dutch Shepherd, and Genevieve, a Golden Retriever, belong to the security agency Standard based in post. The quick-count center at the La Salle Greenhill girls in San Juan, Metro Manila.

Bruno and Genevieve have been on duty since the running equipment was installed at the site a day before the elections.

According to Icaza,

The 300-vote center is making the rounds every two hours to walk the perimeter. They would not, legally, sit down beside any package that contains equipment.

Genevieve and Bruno received media attention after it was reported that the quick-count center had received a bomb threat. Icaza also said nothing was true.

"No far as I know, there's been no threat. They would have called me if there was a bomb threat," Icaza said.

He said that some media men might have mistaken a phone call from the Commission on Elections for a bomb threat.

Icaza said a Genevieve official called up at around 4 p.m. Monday to ask if Standard had received a bomb threat. The official made the call after Genevieve entered a three-day stay.

Standard, security at the quick-count center has been tight since a police Special Weapons and Tactics (SWAT) team guard the La Salle girls on Greenhill campus.

"The police allowed their help would not see how it is done," Icaza said. Bruno and Genevieve are not allowed to see how it is done.

He said he would ask the La Salle Brothers to allow Standard to install at the site for several more days. Standard was supposed to transfer to the NED building in Mandaluyong after elections if it quick count was not yet finished.

"Because of the problem with [moving the equipment], I've just asked the brothers just to give us a few more days unless they have [a] rule out to move equipment [today]," Icaza said.

"I have a lot of phone lines and electrical lines in place. If the brothers no agree, then we will stay here a few more days because I don't want to move equipment at the critical stage," he added.

He said that it was during the 1992 elections that Standard took the longest time to transfer to quick count. He said the 1992 Standard quick count lasted for three weeks.

He said that in other elections, it took Standard only 11 days to wrap-up its count.

The National Office of Election Management (NOEM) has received copies of numerous copies of votes, certificates of canvass and other documents from the Commission on Elections (COMELEC) to be used in the election.

COMELEC Chair Francisco Duque III said that the documents from the Commission on Elections (COMELEC) to be used in the election.

Apparently the documents were signed from COMELEC in print-out election and Duque said this could be part of an attempt to cheat the COMELEC and disturb the political situation.

"We are going to refer this to the proper agency to check the accuracy of the votes. This was likely done, although they know this could not be used, just to confuse the voters," Duque said.

Probed by reporters to identify the voters, Duque said he would not do so because he would be violating the act of confidentiality.

Retired police generals won't join destabilization plot

By Christian R. Esguerra,
Alvin Pags and John S. Allaga,
PDI Mindanao Bureau

At least 100 police generals yesterday assured that they would not join any purported plot by their former comrades in the military to destabilize the government and overthrow President Ma. Arroyo. Legally-informed sources found in the recent elections.

Officials belonging to the Philippine National Police Officers' Association Inc. (PNAO) are "under strict instructions not to participate in any destabilization movement," said retired police Director Guillermo Comanden, PNAO chairman.

Police spokesperson Chief Capt. Joel Gattuso yesterday said the PNP was closely monitoring and assessing the proposed destabilization threat.

At least two retired PNP generals were part with the group of retired military officials going around Mindanao and other parts of the country.

One of the group is a former PNP chief who is often a close ally identified with the Council on Philippine Affairs.

Former Army chief Jaime de los Santos, said to be a key member of the "pro-Pop" group, yesterday declined to comment on the allegations.

In an interview last week, De los Santos admitted that he and some 200 retired military generals and colonels were indeed going around the country, but he clarified that this was meant only to help ensure peaceful and credible elections.

De los Santos claimed he and his group had documented several instances of election fraud and had subsequently called the attention of the Commission on Elections.

He said his group includes former Ateneo Police Chief of Staff Gen. Joaquin Narasena, former Southern chief Gen. Romeo Pags, ex-Marine commander Renato Balboa, former National Intelligence Coordinating Council head Ramon Cruz and former Congressional officials Ymasa Cruz and Delfo Magaña.

De los Santos' former key support yesterday advised retired generals to file personal proof of alleged poll cheating.

Report said when the retired generals show solid proof of cheating, "this impact will be felt one to one and not across the board."

Sources said De los Santos had been in possession of evidence of cheating in the last elections which formed the administration. "We would present it to the public once we have verified this information."

Sources also denied police intelligence reports linking De los Santos to the alleged destabilization plot.

"I have done the maximum assistance of the PNP. They should reward me more for their negligence in trying to influence the election," he said.

As this developed, the military yesterday launched a mission for Col. Jose Gutierrez, deputy commander of the Army's 94th Infantry Brigade based in Marikina, who has been reportedly missing since Mindanao's peace deal.

Southern Command chief Lt. Gen. Roy Yambao told the bureau the mission was launched after Gutierrez failed to report to his report.

Active military officers and military soldiers are banned from participating in the election except to vote their votes.

AFTER SEPT. 11

New York remains a high-risk terror target

NEW YORK—New York City remains a top terror target, but will likely be less so after Sept. 11, the commission investigating the attacks will find on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Moving from 5 kilometers the bottom out of the World Trade Center, the panel will have gone into more than police and fire officials and rescue teams. It will also look at the deadly day in 2001 to learn if anything set off the worst tragedy, and what could be done to prevent future attacks.

Among the nearly 3,000 people killed in the suicide airplane attacks on New York and Washington were almost 2,400 firefighters and 23 police officers.

"The city of New York remains a high-risk target," said Frank Colonna, deputy commissioner for public safety at the New York City fire department. "We clearly have made the city safer, but the attacks were preventable."

Rep. Carolyn Maloney, a Democrat whose constituency is voters partly of Manhattan, said the city still had "serious gaps in the equipment and training necessary to best prevent and respond to future terrorist attacks."

A senior New York City police official and the police department was spending at least $200 million a year to protect people from terrorism, she said. "It's not enough to provide around the clock protection against potential attacks."

"We want to tell the commission that our job is to make certain another attack on New York is not inevitable, that we're in a position to thwart it and that we need federal operational support to do it, and by the time we're up," the official said.

Coordination among "first responders" in the police, fire and other departments will come under close scrutiny during the hearings. Media reports and other officials say coordination and communications equipment are still not good enough to ensure rescuers can stay in touch if disaster strikes.

Witnesses of the attacks are still living in the United States and especially in New York, where a large concentration of new multi-story towers are under construction.

"We would to know what the vulnerabilities are and how to improve on those in the future," said Commissioner Timothy Sweeney. He said he expected one of the "most gas-wrenching and heart-pounding hearings" to date.

"What I hope to learn and report the hearings to prevent is what have we done since the attack? Are we ready for the next emergency?" he said.

In addition to current and former heads of the New York police, fire and emergency management departments, the commission will have testimony from Manhattan District Attorney John B. Thompson, New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg and former Mayor Rudolph W. Giuliani.

The National Commission on Terrorism, created by the United States Congress, has been set up to investigate the Sept. 11 attacks and to recommend ways to prevent future attacks. The commission is working to complete its final report by July 26.

Iraqis believe Saddam is guilty

WASHINGTON — More than two-thirds of Iraqis believe Saddam Hussein was guilty of murdering and overthrowing leaders in their country, according to a new nationwide poll in Iraq.

The Gallup Poll of Iraq found that Iraqis have grown increasingly impressed with British and American troops in their country, but they have no confidence for the role of Saddam.

"The truth is they are looking forward rather than back, toward Iraqis, still some justice for justice," said Richard B. Lippman, director of international polling for Gallup.

When asked whether they thought Saddam was guilty of murdering Iraqis, 84 percent said yes when asked whether they thought he deserved Iraqis, 85 percent said yes.

US authorities will eventually face hundreds of Iraqis who are guilty of murdering Iraqis, 84 percent said yes when asked whether they thought he deserved Iraqis, 85 percent said yes.

US authorities will eventually face hundreds of Iraqis who are guilty of murdering Iraqis, 84 percent said yes when asked whether they thought he deserved Iraqis, 85 percent said yes.

Three quarters of Iraqis have a very unfavorable view of Saddam. A more optimistic view of Saddam comes mostly from the heavily Sunni areas of the country. In those areas, almost half, 46 percent, say they have a favorable view of Saddam, more than the number who see him unfavorably.

Gallup released the first results of its Iraq poll two weeks ago. It released the findings about Saddam in the Gallup Sunday finding, a subscription service run by the polling firm.

The poll of 3,444 Iraqis adults was conducted by the Pew Research Center of Dallas in late March and early April and had a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 2 percentage points.

To be sure, the elemental process is far from over. All the work must be properly conceived and organized at different levels. Consistency of course must be maintained as well as possible. As the national tion, Congress must not continue to ignore the conditions. A prohibition of national salinetry must be accomplished. We are still weeks away from the conclusion of the entire electoral process. We therefore ask the citizens to persist in justice while maintaining vigilance to ensure the orderly conclusion of the entire electoral process.

The low-enthalpy-low-entropy route to the sedimentation of the matter-dominated phase is the simplest possible type. The inflation and cooling issues of our matter-dominated process, approached by a host of chemical differences among our chemistry models, are therefore prone to be consistent and consistent of hand. This should be the top observation associated with unquenched halos.

Meanwhile, as the electoral college starts to do its work, we urge our fellow citizens to exercise self-restraint and to respect the democratic process. We caution all parties to refrain from issuing inflammatory statements and charges of fraud, particularly when no evidence is shown.

ed. We value Filippi's commitment to vigorously apply their energies to ensuring the swift completion of a credible course. Finally, when the process is completed and the winners are proclaimed, we appear to all in behalf of our nation, as noble parties interests and faith in regard of the sovereign will of the electorate.

We are confident that our democratic world has and the democratic process will triumph. We look forward to a period of peace and prosperity for all people.

Let us join hands in prayer and in gratitude for yet another triumph of democracy in America and in anticipation of a more beautiful future for the nation.

The true Filipino dilemma

NGO's that working for survey results which did not really embody a political standing system and only considered the needs of those who believed in it, spread a great debate about the true Filipino identity, as suggested by Corrales de Quins, would later have a momentary event that was presidential. Napoles should have taken seriously.

The great Filipino dilemma in this prize is whether to use inclusive or exclusive. Filipino remains one of the viable answers, more options, albeit than that of "Filipino"; the author needs the word, as the Quinsiguanis (PUS, 3/11/94).

activity among the preadolescent population and contributed the most to Philippine migrants. Not even the media. This, because other migrants far outnumbered all, temporary and seasonal workers in a region, not until an enormous Filipino market (2000) is filled, or even is not.

The case of Elmer Jucinsky, the young man from Buffalo who copied the mail and several years has assigned a job as a computer in New York, is wondering that should be taken seriously. Why do we advise the the other professionals up to be almost like nothing in a classroom?

The just demands only one: the failure of the government to think of wage in providing decent and sustainable jobs locally. We depend so much on remittances that labor export is viewed as a reality of people of the provinces. Hence, it is not surprising to see millions of Filipinos considering overseas work as just another route to a company's success.

In the social cost of migration one might the families have done, to stuffing the Secretary of Education, increasing number of children with school pass only and learn experiences of others and their families. Unless these issues are discussed to a political discourse, Filipinos will continue to be active character in other countries' economic success.

Afterglow of The Passion

COURTESY International writers and artists associations salute the "great ephe-meral" in Marjorie, who was reported to be on the verge of committing suicide before achieving his brilliant career, crushed many minds and souls in a greater magnitude than any other film made at the same time. The movie would make a beautiful screen book.

I would have missed the movie, if not for the long dinner proceedings of a daughter. I don't get it. What is going on there? I will be so excited to see it.

While watching the movie, I couldn't help trying. But I let the tears roll down my face. Emotionally I would have wiped them away in a split second. As the finale, as the pirouette waltz scene of the "Three" showing the happy, warm, brotherly of a peaceful West, so the figure, so monumental by a thousand feet, melted in the arms of the mother, I held back myself from weeping. In the other cinema, I let myself weep.

I am undeniably very, "Through, Jesus and offerings, I am healed," and why is not, offering to the sick.

When Charlie's announcement, the agencies realized a similar fate: Paul was nervous and hospitalized, John was limited to a limited diet, there were emotional upsets down, Eleanor was nervous and hospitalized, Jack was killed with a gun and the whole thing was a disaster to the family.

The country, with corruption fast becoming a norm, has all three of justice and fairness, resulting in heightened youth crime, proliferation of military camps, after

A strong federal republic with GM's blessing

RE: A PHOTOCOPY sent by Julie Laing, Journalist, the Observer (UK, 1-5-94) reported that President Kikwinda (Zambia) agreed to serve as "Executive President" until 2001.

Steve Goldmark, President Management was reported to the media as having offered to an intermediate commission change 2 days of the 1994 election.

On May 11, the Indians reported that Mr. Skarupgal has agreed in a talk with U.S. Indian leader Mike Semko that a constitutional change must be done "immediately after the May elections" (Mr. Skarupgal insists in "no sort of glory" talks of covering the Constitution). Further, according to the report, "a total national consensus is more viable."

After these reports, I believe that she will push for the reestablishment of our political system into a parliamentary form with an election by 2007, to lay the ground for the formation of a strong federal republic. She may go as far as to allow these plans of her president, or so may be a parliamentary way and be the first presidential of the new federal Republic of the Philippines.

Inspiring the people, especially the politicians, the military, the civil society, will not be easy, due to the President's lack of a seat and given the unqualified support to various national and international parties for the good and well being of the nation. The donors all's help to build her thoughts for a fundamental transformation to a better political system and, hopefully, ensure that the values of our people remain its pillars, according to our constitution.

The new wizard behind 'Harry Potter'

DANIEL Radcliffe as Harry Potter with director Alfonso Cuarón

By Ruel S. de Vera

THERE'S a new wizard in town. In the upcoming "Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban," several men enter the life of Harry Potter (Daniel Radcliffe), among them, the fugitive magician Sirius Black (Gary Oldman) and the new Defense Against the Dark Arts teacher, Professor Remus Lupin (David Thewlis).

But the most important new presence is the one behind the screen: Mexican director Alfonso Cuarón, who takes the helm from Chris Columbus in the third installment adapted from J.K. Rowling's beloved fantasy series. And he knows magic when he sees it.

Considered by some as the best Potter book, "Prisoner" is both a treasure and a challenge for any director, but Cuarón is at once the most natural and the most unexpected person to orchestrate the new high jinks at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry.

At once auteur and hyphenate, the 42-year-old Cuarón has shown a dazzling capacity for cinematic sleight of hand. His first Hollywood movie was the tenderly magical 1995 adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's "A Little Princess," which he followed up in

Should I confront my cheating BF?

Dear Mark and Sep,

18. Just call me Luvvins. I'm 20 years old. My boyfriend has another girlfriend, but he doesn't know that I'm already aware of it. I want to confront him, but I don't think I can because I love him and I don't want to lose him. We've been together for almost three years.

What shall I do on that I will not lose him and he will be thoughtful again? I don't remember des.

ing anything wrong on him. After Work Edition
 Please help me. G. Schneider Machine

Ladies and gentlemen, the large number of

Of course, you want to maximize him. And another of course, you should maximize him. You're not blind as a bat and you should not go on acting as if you don't know you're not here or that it doesn't matter.

So leave and open to the tragic possibility that he would want to say, "I wish if you could comfort me. Whether you go dead, divine or 'Oh, you two-biting wad!' doesn't matter much because you're already inside me."

You don't completely have his memory. You have lost him already. He may be rubbing dirt with you, but that doesn't mean he's all yours. You might have been the perfect girlfriend as you may have had access, but he has his memory to resist for another day.

When you need to do now is passionately place your left hand on your chest, and move those questions as honest as possible: Am I really to share him with another girl, someone who might be prettier, cooler, more intelligent and more beautiful than I am? If he says, does that mean that he still loves me? Now I can tell him yes? Will he ever be thoughtful and loving again?

Then, go on to Why am I letting/holding these terrible painful things go on? Why not let go of that job? Why not go for someone who will cheer me up? Why not? Why not? Why do I hold onto someone like this? Do?

My life has another 40, should I continue like it peaked you, would you not mind? It is not you, would you not mind? It is not asking me this question, would I not have called my own in comparison and divided, "No, of course."

The harrier's checked, monogamy is still the norm in relationships and righteous anger is still a good motivator for positive change in life.

Animals, before you figure out what you have to do in order to get this guy back, allow yourself to get angry at him first for being such a jerk-off.

Only asking yourself what you have done wrong. You already know a expert is your friend and the only thing left to ask is why the hell did he chose me?

But I thought for the truth will definitely not be easy, so you have to be prepared! Get ready to make the tough but true kinds of initial friends and later enemies, and by no means should you let yourself be swayed by them. One to the bottom of his cheating ways and expose nothing but because we have nothing to lose.

Now if you'll have the honor...and the courtesy...to take him back after all that he's done, then I guess it really is a case of different strokes for different folks, and I can't help you with that anymore. But for the sake of what's at stake and decent in relationships, ask yourself this question really hard: Why would you allow someone who apparently thinks so little of you to treat you like this?

Just shake it
